THE CASE AGAINST THE INTRODUCTION OF THE CHINAMAN. That it is very unwise to over-state a case is admitted by all good lawyers, yet this would seem to be the error made both by those who advocate and those who oppose the introduction of Chinese unskilled labour into South Africa. It is as absurd to claim that the status of the Chinese coolie employed in the gold mines of the Witwatersrand under the terms of the Ordinance passed by the Transvaal Legislative Council and confirmed by the Imperial Parliament, will be that of a slave, as it is to say that the future of the mining industry and with it the progress and development of South Africa depends upon this form of labour. The cry of slavery has been raised as an excellent one with which to appeal to the people of England, a fact known perhaps to none better than to those who are responsible for its adoption. If this objection to indentured labour in countries under the British flag is an honest one, it is strange indeed that nothing has been heard previously in opposition to its use in the Straits Settlements. Here all manual labour is performed by Asiatics, of whom the Chinese are by far the most numerous and, at the same time, the most useful. For road, railway, and estate work, a certain number of Tamils from Southern India, and natives from other parts of that...
