Excerpt: . . . CHAPTER XIV THE SWALLOW 17 OR a moment Joseph was too stunned to move. Shaking all over with anguish he stood still and looked at the bloodstained trophy fastened at the Indians belt. The hair was exactly the color of Roberts, and Joseph felt sure that his brother had fallen a victim to this redskinned warrior. A great sob rose in the boys throat and the tears welled up into his eyes, as he stood on the prairie and gazed at what he considered the proof of his brothers death. The only one left, thought Joseph. My whole family wiped out by Black Hawk. Thank goodness, I am still here and I swear Ill have revenge. He clenched his fists and gritted his teeth as he thought of all he had suffered at the hands of the savages. How long he stood in this place he did not know. It might have been seconds and it might have been hours, as far as he was concerned, for the young pioneer had lost all sense of time. He was completely wrapped up in his own thoughts. A coyote barked and at the sound Joseph raised his head. He looked about him, but the only sign of life he saw was the two ponies browsing quietly nearby. Id better get out of here, exclaimed the young volunteer suddenly. Theres no telling how soon those other savages may be on my trail if that fellow whose horse...
