Well, Edward, now that the war is over and the country no longer needs my services, the time approaches when you and I must part. On that fearful night of long ago when I realized that I in all probability was a murderer, I vowed to Heaven that I would be dead to all I called dear on earth unless my innocence was fully established. Heaven has willed that we should meet for a time to help carry out the glorious work of freedom. That work has been accomplished, and all that remains for me is to retire once more from the world and await the summons to the final tribunal which can never err in judgment. Edward. Don t talk so, father. Do not condemn yourself until your guilt is fully proved. We will yet unearth the true facts in the case. Besides, I have something to tell you that may alter the case--something that has cast a gloom for me over the joy at the final triumph of our arms. Mother s health is very poor. Patty writes me that the doctors think it very doubtful if she lives till fall. She longs to see you again. If you can be reunited it may save her life. Ah, father, if you are indeed guilty, Heaven cannot demand that you fulfil a vow...
